All about KLEED

KLEED is proud to do things differently: we design beautiful, sophisticated loungewear with a conscience. A conscience that makes us take responsibility for whom we choose to partner with, in every country; which stunning fabrics and dyes we use to manufacture our beautiful clothes; how we engage with and treat our talented workforce and suppliers; what innovative packaging and delivery services use to distribute to our clients.

We passionately believe that in fashion, as in many other sectors, small is beautiful. We are humbled by the talented artisans we work with and their achingly beautiful, hand-crafted creations. Ultimately, we want KLEED to be a force for good in their lives.

This conscience defines what we do and how we do it. We have chartered a course and we move forward step by step, as best we can. Easily? Far from it. We are a fast-growing, but small company – it has taken us years to transform almost every aspect of our business so that one day, we can be 100% sustainable.

Because we do care about the Planet.

Our iconic Ikkats are all hand-woven in India by our skilled artisans, using ancestral weaving techniques. The handlooms, often handed down over several generations, ensure that their communities' unique cultural heritage is kept alive, for future generations to enjoy. The irregularities in the fabric attest to their hand loomed nature, their very uniqueness.
